"Don'ts" for Girls. Girls should never forget, unless they wish to run the risk of putting themselves in quite an impossible class, that many men invite them to go to the theater, roof garden or dinner in summer who would not think of doing so in the winter. In the warm weather a man's family is away, and so are the women friends of his own set. "He won't be seen," is the theory of his actions. But he is seen by his men friends, and if he has with him his pretty stenographer, or girl not of his own so-cial set, they quickly recognize that she is not one of them in the social sense, and almost invariably they set her down for a

Many irons has this versatile woman in the fire, and rarely has she an idle moment. A colony for the cure of inebriate women has been established at Duxhurst, near the Priory, where the patients have pretty little rose-covered cottages and where she goes about them in nurse's attire. Then, too, she has published magasines and an immense amount of literature of a halping sort scattering it broadcast. sines and an immense amount of literature of a helping sort, scattering it broadcast.
